The Center for Economy and Environment (KoWU) is a central academic institution of the Nürtingen-Geislingen University. Our key task is to promote the awareness of responsibility to economy and environment both inside and outside the university. In view of the core competencies of the Nürtingen-Geislingen University we focus on the promotion of a dialogue between economic and environmental perspectives with regard to sustainable development. In order to mediate between economy and environment it is not enough to accumulate knowledge. Our task is to place knowledge in relation to values and norms.

- Is there a science in sustainable development?
And: How can we teach it at university level?
- How can we integrate sustainable development into the regular schedules?
- Do we need a pluralistic view on sustainable development?
- What is sustainable development in your disciplines' context? Which approaches do you prefer in your discipline?
- Can we teach sustainable development without an interdisciplinary context? Do we need an interdisciplinary framework for teaching sustainable development?
